

Tufts University School of Medicine
Assistant/Associate Professor, Division of Medical Education

Tufts University School of Medicine is seeking to add two full-time (12 month), non-tenure, faculty positions at the rank of Assistant or Associate Professor in the Department of Integrative Physiology and Pathobiology, Division of Medical Education. The successful candidate will participate in teaching human gross anatomy, physiology, and histology classes in the Medical, Dental, Physician Assistant, and MS in Biomedical Sciences programs. The Medical School is committed to the use of cadaveric dissection for the education of health professionals, and thus construction is currently underway for a state of the art gross anatomy laboratory that is slated for completion in January 2018. The incoming candidate will be expected to engage in innovative educational scholarship, and develop a leadership role in curriculum development, assessment and novel teaching techniques. Responsibilities will also include student advising/mentoring and active participation in administrative and committee service.

QUALIFICATIONS

Applicants must have a doctoral degree in the biological sciences, at least 3 years of experience teaching didactic and laboratory medical gross anatomy with cadaver dissection, and some teaching experience or appropriate scientific background to participate in teaching physiology and histology. Applicants should have teaching experience in lecture, lab, and small group settings; experience with active and collaborative learning classroom strategies is preferred.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Review of applications will begin on March 1, 2017, and will continue until the position is filled. Applicants should submit a cover letter describing their teaching and scholarly work, a CV and the contact information for 3-4 professional references. Complete application materials must be submitted through Interfolio at <http://apply.interfolio.com/40322> Questions may be directed to MedEd@tufts.edu.
